[youtube id="605tJ1aVPEg"] British singer Bianca Rose has a video for "Because Of Love" which is the second single from her debut album, No Fear Here. Rose self-released her first album 10 years ago and since then she has been busy working within the Ready Ritters Songwriting Collective. After co-writing X-Factor contestant Anastasia Baker's debut project.

Rose has designated 2017 as the time to focus on her own music again with the release of Femi Temowo-produced No Fear Here on January 30th. "Because Of Love" has the rare addition of the cello thanks to Ayanna Witter-Johnson who is the only non-American to win Amateur Night At The Apollo. Rose spoke on the collaboration and said, "Ayanna and I collaborated on every part of the creation of this song, from writing to recording, so it only made sense that the video was an extension of this partnership, whilst debunking the stereotype of competition between women. We believe there is a place for us all in this business so we actively make room for one another."

Rose is excited about the release of No Fear Here and added, "These songs are snippets of the lessons I've learned and am still learning. Some people believe that fear is something we should live with, or that we should use it as motivation to achieve our goals. From my experience, I believe it's something to be conquered and routed out of every area of our lives. I try to live on a daily mission to seek and destroy all traces of fear and oppression in my life. It's the only way that's worked for me."
