

Eliza Shaddad Reveals Her Vulnerability In Video For My Body

[youtube id="huLeIbWqIC8"]Eliza Shaddad releases any pretention about herself in the video for her single "My Body." The London singer candidly states the point of the indie rock tune, "I

"My Body" is a song about "being betrayed by your body. Knowing full well that you need to be alone, but doubting it every night."

Director Joe McCrae, who she worked on the video for "White Lines," has the camera watch her move around restlessly in her bedroom as she tries to find comfort within her physical state. The new song will be included on her forthcoming debut album Future. "My Body" is the second single from Future which is coming out later this year.