Black Milk: Laugh Now Cry Later Official Video & Fever Album Stream

[youtube id="CgUze4VdW-M"] Black Milk's Fever is out now and the first video for the song "Laugh Now Cry Later." He co-directed the clip which challenges the excessive use of social media. The couple in the video has been reduced to a catatonic state because their faces are glued to their phone screens. They sit next to each other but cannot interact because they have their phones in hand. Black Milk appears as zombie pizza delivery man and the whole thing ends with a warning about the president.

Black Milk Questions Society On True Lies Single

Black Milk takes society to task in “True Lies” from his forthcoming album Fever. He questions the school system over a track that is equal parts funk, rock and hip-hop. Black Milk said in a press release about “True Lies”:

“I talk about how traditions and institutions are used to keep people from questioning the world around them and from demanding more for themselves. When I made the track, I envisioned a world full of zombies being told what to believe. Only a few come to realize most of what they’ve been taught about and within the institutions, like church, school, and government, around them are lies to impede both personal and collective progress.”

Fever will be released via Computer Ugly and Mass Appeal February 23rd.

Black Milk's Laugh Now Cry Later First Single From FEVER

Black Milk announced his new album FEVER two days ago and now he is sharing the first single "Laugh Now, Cry Later." He says the song is about the conflicting emotions people have when they engage with social media:

"One moment you can be super angry about something and a couple of minutes later you'll see a meme about that very same issue or some other random event that will make you laugh. We're taking in high volumes of content and experiencing an array of emotions, often times conflicting emotions, all day and night on this social media rollercoaster."

FEVER is a multi-genre album with appearances from star musicians Chris Dave and Daru Jones. And as far as the album's concept Black Milk said in a press release:

"Everybody's temperature is up right now. The whole world is on edge. This album is my take on the issues I see as the cause for the high temp, and how I'm maneuvering through it."
