

Author Christopher Johnson Responds To Steve Harvey's Critique of Black Men

A native of Kansas City, Missouri now residing in Los Angeles, Johnson is the CEO of CBJ Enterprises. An author, relationship coach and motivational speaker, he has just released his third book from CBJ Publishing entitled "Hang Up the Phone, the Guide to Getting Over Your EX in 30 Days." Johnson contends that the formula to a good relationship is successfully getting over the last one. "I don't want a woman to think like a man," he says referring to Harvey's best selling book, "but I do want her to be over her last relationship when she gets to me. Many a good man's heart has been tangled up in the battlefield of a past relationship gone bad." Johnson's past titles include "My Mom Was My Dad" a book written to help single mothers deal with raising sons, and "Getting Dressed from the Inside" a journey to reach the paradise of self-worth.

With the creation of the Good Man Society, Johnson hopes to dispel once and for all the myth about the lack of eligible good men. The society is open to all races, but first and foremost, Johnson is focusing on Black men as they have been the target of recent media exposés like the one highlighting Steve Harvey. He is securing sign ups at the site and has plans to create a national forum for good men around the country.

With a mission to better the world, one person at a time, Johnson's philanthropy efforts also include two non-profit organizations focused on helping the community at large. "Let Everybody Read" is spearheading the push to secure impactful reading materials in low income areas, while his "Best Food Award" focuses on providing business attire to disadvantaged adults working to secure jobs in the workforce.

"I've always believed in being proactive not just reactive. I am so grateful that the response to my message has been so overwhelming. I never anticipated such a reception, but I am compelled to spearhead a movement for good men. It's one thing to get a bad rap, but we are basically out here and not being acknowledged at all. It is time for a change and I believe God is directing me," expresses Johnson.

To view Christopher Johnson's video response to Steve Harvey go to <http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=Klv4fbqmYLI> . To read the open letter or sign up for the Good Men Society, go to <http://www.goodmansociety.com/>.

To know about Christopher Johnson, visit with him at <http://www.cbjglobal.com> . "Hang Up the Phone" can be purchased on at www.BarnesandNoble.com.