Frank Addai is back with “Feeling You” from his forthcoming EP. Addai received attention earlier this year for his cover of Naughty Boy’s “Runnin’ (Lose It All).” Solarium produced “Feeling You” and Addai explains the story behind the song:

“The song stemmed from a simple phone call I had with Solarium, about my desire to create some soulful house music that is R&B melody heavy. I wanted people to vibe to the music, but also appreciate the musical sensibilities. Solarium led on the production and writing on this record, and as soon as I heard the track, I thought it was a banger. I just had to record it and put it out there.”

Addai’s untitled EP is scheduled for release at the beginning of 2018.

Frank Addai reworks Naughty Boy’s Beyonce and Arrow Benjamin collaboration “Running (Lose It All)” into a smoother R&B version. The East London musician worked with producer/composer Ian Green (Michael Jackson, Madonna) on the cover and said this about the record:

“It speaks to where I’m at in life and in my musical journey right now. I’ve tried hard to suppress the desire to do music as a career, because I convinced myself that other career interests were more worthwhile. However, towards the back end of last year, I came to a final conclusion, that music is what I should be doing.”

Addai is working with Green on his debut album to follow-up his 2013 The Intro EP.
