

Malcolm X TV Series Is Being Developed

A television series about Malcolm X based on Manning Marable's book is being developed by independent studio Critical Content. The studio has optioned Marable's Malcolm: A Life Of Reinvention to create a scripted drama series. Catfish The TV Show and The Case Of: JonBenet Ramsey are two of the many shows produced by Critical Content. A David Matthews is writing the script and will executive produce the project with the studio's Ray Ricord, Andrew Marcus and Tom Forman. No one has been cast for any of the roles yet and there is no network attached to series as of yet. Critical Content also has plans to produce a documentary about Malcolm X's legacy.

Media Questions Of The Week

Is the Music Machinery map correct about popular music tastes around the United States?

[youtube id="g7SG8A5npAs"]

Is Malcolm X's daughter, Iiyasah Shabazz right about whites being able to sing the N-word if Blacks can record it?

As we celebrate our great African American thespians we would also like to take this moment to tell Hollywood wake up! The movies that you make don't look like how the world really is. YALL still putting one or two black people in the movie! So on this black history month we want to tell Hollywood we don't really like that shit, Because that's not the way the world really is and YALL think nobody knows the black man oversees!! So dear Hollywood could you please open your eyes and see #Blackhistory #Blackhistorymonth #Allblackeverything @revolttv
