This is the theatrical trailer for Ava DuVernay's "Middle Of Nowhere." Emayatzy Corinealdi is the central character married to Omari Hardwick's character who is serving an eight-year prison sentence. There is a betrayal and she also meets a new man and must negotiate both relationships and the fact that she stalled her career for her husband. It always nice to see a film focused around Black female autonomy. The film will be in theaters October 12th.

Ava DeVernay's "Middle of Nowhere" is an official selection at this year's Sundance Film Festival. The film maker describes the story as "A love story about love as a choice." Omari Hardwick, who had a starring role in her last feature "I Will Follow," works with DuVernay again. Emayatzy Corinealdi, Edwina Findley, Sharon Lawrence, Lorraine Toussaint and David Oyelowo round out the main players.
