

Oprah Winfrey Accepts Cecile B. DeMille Award At The Golden Globes Awards

[youtube id="LyBims80kSY"] Oprah Winfrey became the first Black woman to receive the Cecile B. DeMille Award at The Golden Globes ceremony last night. Her acceptance speech started with an ode to Sidney Poitier who was the first Black person to accept the honor in 1982 and then she acknowledged the responsibility of representation and the industry's current coming-out about sexism.

Oprah referenced Recy Taylor, the Black woman from Alabama who was gang-raped by six white men in 1944. Taylor's attackers were never convicted despite their confessions after an investigation spearheaded by Rosa Parks. Taylor passed last month shortly before her 98th birthday and Oprah used her story to the history of women being violated. Her speech rallied for the #MeToo Movement and a new world without sexism. This morning while the hype surrounding her appearance was still high, anonymous sources told the media that Oprah is seriously thinking about running for president in 2020.

Media Questions Of The Week

Is Oprah right about the Ferguson protestors lacking leadership?

[youtube id="yrMU9wm8hn4"]

Has Macklemore taken his own advice and acknowledged his place in hip-hop culture as a white person?

[youtube id="VPbZNDrfeaU"]

Should Target have used a Black model for their Annie-themed clothing campaign especially since Quvenzhane Wallis is currently starring in the Annie movie? Was it necessary to start a petition asking the retailer for more diversity?

Media Questions Of The Week

[youtube id="_qawVAIs77I"]

1. Is LL Cool J correct in his sentiment that it's more important for fans to buy albums individually instead of the free download promotion of Jay-Z's Magna Carta album distributed by Samsung?

2. Is Akon right that African-Americans should move back to Africa in response to the George Zimmerman verdict?

3. Did Oprah really pay Lindsay Lohan $2 million for an 8 part docu-series? If so, will the interview pay off as projected?

Media Questions Of The Week

1. Will the Scarface and Beanie Sigel collaboration live up to expectations?

video platformvideo managementvideo solutionsvideo player

2. Isn't Oprah too desperate for ratings by wanting to interview George Zimmerman instead of Trayvon Martin's family?

3. Why does the media continue to drag out all the negative details surrounding Whitney Houston's death but they didn't do it when Amy Winehouse died?