

Little Brother's May The Lord Watch Streaming Now

Phonte and Rapper Big Pooh debuted their documentary over the holiday weekend via their YouTube channel. The Little Brother co-founders have hosted film screenings nationwide in Washington, D.C., Atlanta, Georgia, New York, New York, and Los Angeles, California. They both made statements explaining the choice to present the movie on the platform.

"Little Brother entered this business independently, and based on the current landscape, we see no need to change course. This film is a love letter to our fans, a celebration of the people who made us, and a testament to our core values of authenticity, ownership, and craftsmanship. It took us five years to complete this, and it finally feels right."
– Phonte

"One of the things I've been hearing people talk about is how our music was either shared with them or they shared our music with someone else, sometimes even forming life long bonds. YouTube is the perfect intersection where all demographics meet. Having the ability to release our documentary via YouTube felt like the perfect way to share our story with Little Brother fans while leaving open the possibility of introducing ourselves to an entirely new group of potential fans." – Rapper Big Pooh

The documentary chronicles their rise, breakup, and reunion. Director Holland "vacay" Gallagher and writer "Yoh" Phillips helped them tell their story as one of the preeminent rap groups of the 2000s with former producer 9th Wonder. Fans will get to see how Phonte and Rapper Big Pooh experience the challenges of the music industry, which strains their relationship, but they eventually reconcile. May The Lord

Little Brother Is Having A Block Party With Big K.R.I.T. The Cool Kids & More

Rapper Big Pooh & Phonte By Antoine Lyers

Little Brother is having a block party in their hometown of Durham, North Carolina as part of their yearlong celebration of their debut album The Listening. Group co-founders Rapper Big Pooh and Phonte kicked off the 20th-anniversary celebrations in March with a four-city tour. Made In Durham: A Little Brother Block Party will take place on October 7th. They will perform and Big K.R.I.T., The Cool Kids and Zo! & Tall Black Guy are the supporting acts. Comedian Sam Jay will host the event and DJs Wally Sparks and DJ Hourglass will be behind the decks. The duo released a video parody of wrestler Booker T's infamous use of the N-word use in a 1997 promo with Phonte posing as Booker and Big Pooh playing his partner Stevie Ray aka Harlem Heat. The party starts at 12 noon and performances begin at 3 PM. The location is 310 East Main St, Durham, North Carolina 27701. Tickets can be purchased here.

Rapper Big Pooh Returns With To Dream In Color Album

Rapper Big Pooh is back after three years with his latest solo album To Dream In Color. The co-founding member of the North Carolina trio Little Brother started working on the music in 2016. He revisited the demos he made and turned them into what he calls a reflection of the life he has lived so far. The 10-song player is welcomed because Pooh was last heard from on Little Brother's May The Lord Watch in 2020. He revealed his thoughts about To Dream In Color in a press release:

"To Dream In Color represents living life. A lot of times we are so focused on goals that we never stop to see all that we've accomplished... With this album, my focus was on painting a picture with words. I wanted to essentially create an audiobook. My hope is that listeners get a better sense of who I am as a person by actually hearing my story. I speak about lacking confidence, stage fright, swallowing pride, my childhood, and so much more. This is my most personal body of work and it's some scary shit knowing people are gonna listen, judge, and maybe take something away from it that I didn't intend. That's when you know you have made great art,

The rapper who has also been DJing under the name RPM is launching his headlining tour this Thursday, August 25th in Charlotte, North Carolina.
