

Media Questions Of The Week

Will The Get Down be picked up by someone else now that Netflix has canceled it?

"I think poverty to a large extent is also a state of mind," @SecretaryCarson explained to @Arightside.
pic.twitter.com/XyGAYNYYkT

– SiriusXMPolitics (@SXMPolitics) May 24, 2017

What did Ben Carson mean by saying “poverty being a state of mind?”

Netflix's The Get Down Is Canceled

Netflix has canceled The Get Down after one season. Baz Luhrmann's series about the beginnings of hip-hop and the political tension in the Bronx just released the second-half of season one last month. It was previously noted that The Get Down was one of Netflix's most expensive shows with a total cost of $120 million for the first season. The high price was attributed to delays in the pre-production and production process. Luhrmann told fans of the show on Facebook that the cancellation was the result of his inability to work on The Get Down full time.

Nas Brings Gil Scott-Heron's Angel Dust Into 2017 For Season Two Of The Get Down

[youtube id="uunn8xk0JJA"] Nas has created his own version of Gil Scott-Heron's "Angel Dust" for season two of Netflix's The Get Down. The series takes place in the Bronx during the emergence of hip-hop in the '70's and there is an up-close look at how drug culture and the music were intertwined. Gil Scott-Heron sang about his addiction to Angel Dust in 1978 and Nas raps about the destruction it caused in urban America over the original track. The Get Down II soundtrack will be released April 21st.

The Get Down Returns In April

[youtube id="JUz230rMKIU"] Baz Luhrmann's second season of the hip-hop Netflix series The Get Down will return on April 7th. The show debuted last year and was quickly recognized for its historical scope of hip-hop's Bronx beginnings and the soundtrack. It was rumored that the show would not return but Nelson George announced on Twitter that part two is coming in the spring.